- When I talk to British Columbians, one of the most important things to them is that government is open and accountable.
- Being part of a government that works for British Columbians means being transparent and providing timely access to information, while protecting the privacy of individuals.

- We're examining access to information rules so we can strengthen them and improve accountability.
- We're working hard to improve response and processing time for freedom of information requests so the public gets information faster.
- We're establishing a culture of responsible record keeping and respect for freedom of information rules.
- Above all, we'll respect the British Columbians we work for by being open, transparent, and accountable to them.
