Columbia River Treaty in 1954. s.22

s.22 shared this with Colin Smith who has represented APEG-BC and been our lead private sector representative for many years at PNWER. I think it is an interesting story, and one that highlights the ingenuity of BC engineers who worked with their American counterparts in designing the treaty dams, and determining the likely benefits to be shared, even before the treaty dams were constructed.

Please continue to think of ways that PNWER could be helpful as the negotiation process progresses. We are planning a session at the winter meeting in Seattle in November on CRT, and would very much like your help, thoughts, and advice as we plan this.

The following factoid on the Columbia River may be of interest to you. I get this news on the passing away of Monenco engineers.

^{s.22}

Subject: Sad news - ^{s.22}

s.22 was an excellent hydrological engineer.

I worked with him on several projects. The one I remember best was the calculation of energy benefits from the Columbia River storage dams in Canada for water passing through several powerplants in the USA. Here is the story.

In 1954, I was part of a 4-man team, headed by s.22 our chief hydrologist, working on the power benefits on the Columbia River due to the construction of three storage dams, one being Duncan, in British Columbia.

The Americans had a similar team working on the same problem. Our task was to calculate the incremental energy derived from the stored water flowing through 4 powerplants in BC and about 6 more in the USA. We had 48 years of flow records and it was a monumental task, so large in fact that s.22 decided to use only one year, the next lower below the average year, and using only 34 flow periods of 10 days each, and one 15 day period for the year. Our only tools were slide rules and one adding machine. The American General at the USA Corps of Engineers would devise a flow scenario, and both teams would then work out the benefits and compare the results. On the first scenario, we found that we could complete the task in 6 days, and we then sent our results to the general by telegram. A month later, an answer was received advising that they agreed with our calculation, theirs being about 1.5% higher. A second scenario was received, and we sent out the answer a week later. Again a delay of a month, but this time the telegram advised that the general would like to phone our chief hydrologist at 2.00pm the next day, and indicated their result was again about 1% higher than ours. Next day s.22 answered the phone, and after a few preliminaries, the general said (I was listening in on another phone) "we have a complement of 54 engineers and 12 technicians working on the power scenarios feeding data into two UNIVAC computers, and it takes us over a month to get an answer. Our numbers agree with yours within less than 1.5%, yet you are producing answers within about a week. We would like to know how many engineers and technicians are working for you, and in particular, the manufacturer of your computer!!" When s.22 told him of our capabilities, he was somewhat discombobulated.

Alyson,
Thanks - here is the officer list for PNWER:
Current President: Larry Doke, MLA, SK
US Vice Presidents:
Senator Mike Cuffe, MT
Representative Gael Tarleton, WA
Canadian Vice President:
Premier Bob McLeod, NWT

There is a vacancy left from Graham Sucha not succeeding in his election.

The other vacancy we will be looking to fill is the US VP which will be open when one of the two US VP's becomes President this July.

There is a custom that the longest serving VP usually is nominated for President, but it is called out in our rules that this is not required.

Please let me know if you have any questions.

Brandon, could you send Alyson a copy of the PNWER Rules & Regulations, as well as the PNWER Officer's Manual?

Sincerely,

Matt

Rick,

It was good to meet with Deputy Minister Plecas last month and talk about BC's priorities for PNWER. We had a good discussion about the points raised in your letter, and I wanted to respond to you with some of the suggestions our team put together based on your priorities.

I look forward to working with you as we move forward to the Summit and planning the Winter Meeting in Seattle. Thanks for your leadership on the environment and energy working group, and the Innovation group as well.

Thanks also for your leadership Rick in PNWER. I look forward to seeing you in Saskatoon.
