Subject: EMBC Update - June 1, 2019 at 07:00 hrs

Good morning,

EMBC UPDATE – June 1, 2019 at 07:00 hrs

There were no new significant incidents over the past 24 hours.

PROVINCIAL WEATHER

The upper ridge which has been over the province the past few days will shift eastward into Alberta today signalling a change in the large-scale weather pattern. As the ridge retreats, a southwesterly flow (jetstream) will develop which will direct a series of weak systems towards the Alaska Panhandle and into the northern part of the province. The jetstream is expected to slowly move southward over the next few days and this will bring a cooling trend to the province.

Today, most of the notable weather will be in the north, with showers and thunderstorms expected for areas north of Prince George. Conditions will settle on Sunday, but another bout of showers are expected for Monday. In the south, it will remain dry through Tuesday except for isolated thunderstorms today in the Kootenays.

The worst of the wildfire smoke over B.C. is in the northeast but there should be some improvement later today as winds shift to the west. Hazy conditions over southern B.C. will also improve.

WEATHER ALERTS

A Special air quality statement continues for the East Kootenay, Elk Valley, Williston, Peace River, McGregor, Fort Nelson, and Muncho Lake Park - Stone Mountain Park.
