Unfortunately this morning is packed with meetings for both of us, so we will have to do this over email, if possible.

If you could let me know before Cabinet, that would be ideal.....

Hi folks,

I have made some changes to the IB for your review. I thought it sounded too much like an AU promo and was missing the context around why this government is moving forward. So it has basically a new second para. Also removed the line about post-sec programs offered by AU... too much of a poke in the eye to the broader post-sec community.

Tks,

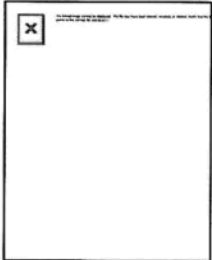

Robb

You seem to be spending a lot of time to create excuses to justify such a fee. The saying "doth protest too much" applies to your behaviour, Mr. Ledingham.
Is it proper for you to even be handling this file, as you are named in it?
You should have proposed substantial and specific ways and means to narrow the request.
Instead, you let your vendetta cloud your good judgment.
I recommend you recuse yourself.

So, let me get this straight, first your in-house IT director blames me for sending an email containing a signature that did not exist. (There was no signature in the email I sent!)

1. Our in-house IT director in his email of October 2 to me (and provided to you) states :

"In the original email the sender has two tracking images. These images are "hidden" and are usually designed to track usage of email. So if you open the email outlook will often times ask you and warn you not to download images unless you feel it's safe. The images are basically 1px gifs that once you trigger to download them it sends back a bunch of information to track you.

Here is part of the HTML CODE (cleardot.gif is the fake image):

img src="https://ssl.gstatic.com/ui/v1/icons/mail/images/cleardot.gif" class="gmail-m_4910954045269621106gmail-CToWUd gmail-CToWUd"><div id="gmail-m_4910954045269621106gmail-:1vc" class="gmail-m_4910954045269621106gmailajR"

Here is the info: <https://superuser.com/questions/658098/how-does-google-cleardot-gif-track-email-recipients-with-a-generic-url>

In light of this explanation, and our detailed instruction how you can confirm this in your Gmail account, do you accept that your initial email to the writer contained these tracking images?

Then you send me this bogus fee invoice for a report that can be run pretty quickly and simply, for a very short period of time. This isn't a 25-hour file. It can be done in less than two-and-a-half.

2. Again, here is the email provided to you from our EXTERNAL AND INDEPENDENT server/exchange consultant dated October 2:

"Our Microsoft Exchange message tracking logs only go back 30 days. As this request came in on October 2nd, the maximum I can go back to see what messages that were sent to Clark and sent from Clarke, only start at September 6th. In order to get full message tracking beyond the 30 days, I would have to restore a Domain Controller, the database server and the Cas server front ends back from that time frame in an isolated environment. That is about 25 hours of work, the bulk of which is trying to keep it off our production network, yet still be able to access this information. That would provide tracking logs to show the message was received by Clark, but still would not explain that the message was delivered into his junk email folder."

You asked us to engage an external and independent consultant, yet when we ask them for their assessment of the work required to provide what you are requesting, you label their estimate as 'bogus' and pronounce that the matter can be done in less than two and a half hours when you are clearly not qualified or competent to opine on matters of servers and exchanges. (For the record, neither is the writer, which is why we approached an expert to do so).

What, Mr. Ledingham, would you spend this $3,300 on if I were to send it to you? The PavCo Christmas party? Before visions of sugarplums begin to dance in your head... my question was merely hypothetical.

3. While we (sincerely) appreciate the artful sarcasm in your query, the fees received from you would be wholly used to pay the invoice of the external server/exchange consultant to accomplish what you have requested.

No, I'm not going to pay for what should be free.

4. We do not agree that these services be free to you, when PavCo would otherwise be expending public funds to satisfy your request. The fees are as estimated by our external server/exchange consultant for their services alone, and are permitted under section 75 of the Act.

To place this request in context, it was made by you, understandably, when we had yet to locate an email that you had sent to us. In those circumstances, you rationally requested that some technical explanation be provided because you knew that you had sent the email in question. Shortly after receiving your request to conduct a forensic evaluation of the email receipt, we informed you that the email (as it turns out, two of them) had been quarantined in the writer's Outlook junk folder. The writer advised our IT Director of the junk file location of your emails and, out of an abundance of caution and with regard to your concerns, did not himself open the emails and left that solely to the IT Director.

PavCo's IT Director concluded that your emails were relegated to a junk folder because they contained hidden files – we believe unknowingly or inadvertently included by you in those emails – which prompted our computer security protocols to sequester them within our email system.

Our external consultant also notes that your request as it is presently constituted will not provide you with any explanation of how these emails were delivered into the junk folder, which we understand to be the reason behind your inquiry.

I recommend you reconsider the predatory fee tactic.

5. Please see above.

What substantial and specific ways and means of narrowing do you propose?

6. Given the technical nature of your request, we are not in a position to narrow your request to the point that it would take less than three hours of work. We also note that the outside consultant has stated that the 25 hours of work would 'provide tracking logs to show the message was received by (the writer), but still would not explain that the message was delivered into his junk email folder.' To that end, please identify what specific question you are seeking to have answered by your request so that we might provide the suggestions requested by you. We believe that you seek information on how your emails were disposed to a junk email folder, which we have addressed without the additional work you have requested us to undertake without expense to you.

I'm always willing to meet in the middle and negotiate in good faith.

7. We always seek to deal with applicants in good faith. In doing so in this instance, we have provided you with a technical explanation answering your question. Should this be unsatisfactory to you, we refer you to the OPIC for review of our response. As your request is for a technical forensic evaluation of our email system that we are confident would only support the conclusions of both our IT Director and external server/exchange consultant, there appears to be little technical opportunity to 'meet in the middle and negotiate' in the context of your request. This is particularly so when you have refused to consider payment of the third-party fee estimate to conduct the evaluation you seek.

Your track record shows that you are not. But it's never too late for you to begin, Mr. Ledingham.

Please respond by the end of day Nov. 9.

8. You have our reasoned and rational reply.

The ball is in your court, Mr. Ledingham.

Sincerely,

Bob Mackin
